

Major Corporations Now Discriminating Against Christians in Canada

Corporate giants such as Ford, Home Depot, Xerox and over 70 others have joined together to attack Christian businesses and institutions. Under the banner Legal Leaders for Diversity they have successfully challenged a Christian University's law school accreditation and now are turning their attention to "vendors and suppliers" whose ownership or employee base supports traditional marriage.

Attacks accreditation of Christian University

One of their three initiatives is "Creating a More Inclusive Profession for LGBT Lawyers and Staff. LLD's mission objective is to "Support vendors and suppliers whose ownership or employee base reflects a commitment to diversity and inclusion." LLD has only attacked Christians so far as they wrote a letter on August 16, 2013 to the Federation of Law Societies of Canada against Trinity Western University's accreditation. The letter objected to the Christian community standards that would require students to abstain "from sexual intimacy that violates the sacredness of marriage between a man and a woman."

On March 26th, 2014, one of LLD's lead corporations, the Bank of Montreal, wrote a scathing letter to the Law Society of Upper Canada entitled "RE: Accreditation of Trinity Western University's ("TWU") proposed law school program." The missive states "The purpose of this letter is to request the Law Society deny the accreditation of any legal educational programs, recognized for the admission of the bar of Ontario, that are discriminatory." BMO was successful as the Law Society denied Trinity Western.

With one success under their belt, LLD is now advancing their war against Christians. On October 9th, the Bank of Montreal took the lead and sent an email to its legal suppliers outlining their plan stating "BMO requires the law firms with whom we do business to disclose the diversity statistics of their associates, partners and management committee as part of our External Counsel Selection Program."

BMO goes on to say "The bank is starting with legal suppliers and going from there. If their standards are not compatible with the bank, they will be dropped. Beyond that, the bank is intent on its employee's reflecting its 'inclusiveness' as not just tolerating others but 'reflecting' the values of the clients."

How many gays and lesbians are on your staff?

In an interview with the Canadian Lawyer Magazine, BMO's vice president Simon Fish threatens "that in the future, the metrics will influence who the legal group chooses to do business with. The bank hopes its diversity efforts will give law firms another reason to ensure their teams include people from different ethnic groups, members of the lesbian and gay community." The smokescreen of ethnic diversity is painfully obvious as the BMO's board of directors is 100% white.

If allowed to go unchecked it will be almost impossible to do business in Canada without gaining the approval of these eighty corporations. If a company does not have sufficient number of gays and lesbians or supports traditional marriage it appears that such a business would not be able to work with Ford, HP, Dell or Coca Cola, to name just a few.
